Celtic midfielder Scott Brown is expected to start for Scotland against Norway in their World Cup qualifier.

Brown has only had 25 minutes of competitive action for Celtic since recovering from ankle surgery.

But Scotland manager George Burley said: "Scott has trained well. Each day, he is getting stronger and I'm very pleased that he is available."

Cardiff keeper David Marshall is also expected to start against a Norway side with no injury worries of their own.

Rangers goalkeeper Neil Alexander had stated on Monday that Marshall deserved a starting place in the absence of the injured Craig Gordon.

But Burley was keeping his cards close to his chest about who would be his first choice for the Group Nine game in Oslo on Wednesday.

"It's a massive blow losing Craig, but it gives someone else a chance," he said.

The 23 who are here are all fit and raring to go

Defenders Stephen McManus, Gary Naysmith and Kirk Broadfoot, midfielders James Morrison and Barry Robson, plus striker Chris Iwelumo, all failed to make the initial squad through injury.

Midfielder and former captain Barry Ferguson and goalkeeper Allan McGregor were not considered because of misbehaviour during Scotland's last get-together.

But, like Norway, Scotland have had no withdrawals from their original squad through injury.

"It's great that we have a full complement of players and that has not always been the case," the Scotland boss said.

"Four players are missing from the last game against Iceland, but the 23 who are here are all fit and raring to go and we will announce the team tomorrow.

"I've got a basic idea of who I'm looking to start and we've been through a few things. We have options in a number of positions."

Alexander had surprised many by not promoting his own case for a starting place.

"I think David Marshall will play and deservedly so," he suggested because of Marshall's time as understudy to Gordon and McGregor.

"I know what it's like to be in the squad for years and be overlooked. I'm here as cover because Craig's missing."

Assistant manager Terry Butcher trusted Burley to make the right choice.

"He makes bold decisions; he's always done that in his career and he's done so with Scotland in the past," said Butcher.

"Sometimes, your gut feelings are your best feelings, but that's down to George and his gut feelings in the past have been very good."

Steven and Gary Caldwell in training

Steven and Gary Caldwell are hoping to be defensive partners

Gordon had earlier revealed that he had only just missed out on selection and expects to return to training this week after three months out through injury.

Steven Caldwell, having achieved promotion to England's top flight with Burnley, will be hoping to partner brother Gary, of Celtic, in central defence.

Scotland are second in Group Nine and in pole position to secure a play-off place with three games remaining.

Norway lie bottom and must win their remaining games to have any chance of playing in South Africa next summer.
